HISTORIC BUILDINGS OF NORTHFIELD

Northfield—A Frontier Town

The history of Northfield is the history of the Connecticut Valley. Generations of native Squakheags lived here before the first Englishmen came to purchase land in 1672. For two years settlers and native people lived in peace until the settlement was destroyed in King Philip's War. Seven years later the grant holders returned to rebuild. This settlement too was doomed to fail due to the wars between the French and English. At the end of Queen Anne's War in 1713, the survivors petitioned for a renewal of their grants. Governor Dudley agreed if an "Orthodox Minister" was engaged and the town be named Northfield. The first meeting house was built right in the middle of the street in the center of town.

After the Revolutionary War the town grew with the new nation. On Main Street, where the original 17th-century property lines are still discernable (see insert), the Stearns family of architect-builders erected the handsome Federal and Greek Revival style homes lining the street today. During the "Great Migration" of the 19th century many Irish families came with the building of the railroads and Polish immigrants came to farm the fertile land.

World-renown evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, born in Northfield, returned to found Northfield Seminary for Young Ladies in 1879 and Mount Hermon School for Boys a few years later. The excitement generated by Moody's summer religious conferences attracted visitors from all over the world, with 40 trains a day arriving at the station on the west side of the river. The American Youth Hostel Movement began here in 1934.

Today the town retains its 17th-century linear common and an impressive array of fine 19th-century homes. The "Great Meadow," which stretches along the bank of the Connecticut River, is still planted to corn as it has been for a thousand years.
